

Overview

Siman 309 Seif 4(b):

If one placed it there intentionally with the intent that it would remain there through the beginning of Shabbos, it is prohibited to tilt it or shake it off. Some maintain that even if one placed it there with the intent that it would remain there at the outset of Shabbos but with the intent that he will take it on Shabbos, it is permitted to tilt or shake off the muktzah and it is prohibited only when one intended for the muktzah to remain for all of Shabbos. In such a case even if the muktzah item is removed it is prohibited to move the utensil because once it became a base for something that is prohibited on Shabbos it is prohibited for the duration of Shabbos. The same is true for all muktzah items and this is discussed in siman 310. If someone placed a muktzah item on his friend's object we do not say that the friend's object became a base for the prohibited item since a person cannot prohibit his friend's objects without his knowledge.

- ❖ If one placed it there intentionally but did not specifically intend that it should remain there for Shabbos and then forgot that it was there, it is considered as though he forgot it there and Bais Yosef maintains that this is true even if he placed it there on erev Shabbos. Magen Avrohom asserts that something does not become a base unless one intended that it should be there but if someone randomly placed something down, as one does in a chest where he places all sorts of objects, it is not considered as though he placed it there intentionally and is considered as though he forgot it there and one may use the non-muktzah item after shaking off the muktzah item. The box would be muktzah if the muktzah item is more important than the non-muktzah. Accordingly, it is acceptable to remove the upper tablecloth once a gentile took away the lamp since the lamp did not have to rest specifically on the tablecloth. Others are stringent about this and in a circumstance of need one may follow the lenient position. If a nest contains an egg that has a chick inside the nest is muktzah even if one did not know the egg was there before Shabbos since it is common for there to be muktzah eggs in a nest. (M.B. 18)
- ❖ This opinion maintains that it is not muktzah since one intended to move the muktzah item and when facing a loss one may rely on this opinion. If one had in mind that it would be there for Shabbos it is muktzah even if one did not intend that it should be there for all of Shabbos. (M.B. 21)
- ❖ If one thought to remove it during bein hashemashos on Shabbos afternoon it is as if one had in mind it would be there for all of Shabbos. (M.B. 22)
- ❖ Rema's comment refers to the first opinion as well. (M.B. 23)
- ❖ In other words, it is permitted to move the utensil if it is needed once the muktzah was removed. (M.B. 26)
- ❖ If one did this for his friend's benefit it is assumed that he is happy with what was done. For example, if Reuven placed a dish under Shimon's lamp to prevent a fire, even after the

Storing paper in a sefer

ואם הניחם עליה מדעתו

And if he placed it there intentionally

Shulchan Aruch (סעי' ד') presents two opinions when a utensil becomes a base for a muktzah item for the entire Shabbos. According to the first opinion, as long as one places down the muktzah item with the intent that it should remain on the utensil for bein hashemashos the utensil becomes a base for muktzah and even if the muktzah is removed, the utensil remains a base for muktzah for the rest of Shabbos. According to the second opinion, a utensil becomes a base only if the owner's intent is for it to remain there for the entirety of Shabbos. If one intended to have the muktzah item removed some time on Shabbos, the utensil is not a base for muktzah and once the muktzah item is removed the utensil may be handled. Mishnah Berurah (סי'ק כ"יא) writes that in a circumstance of loss one may rely on the lenient opinion.

Rav Moshe Feinstein (אג"מ אר"ח ח"ד ס"י ע"ב) writes that if one intentionally places a muktzah item on a sefer Torah, even if his intent was for it to remain there for the entire Shabbos, the sefer Torah does not become a base for that muktzah item. Since it is disrespectful to the Torah and runs counter to its sanctity, it is as if someone placed a muktzah object on his friend's utensil (See Rema at the end of this seif). However, if someone places down a muktzah object on a sefer, the sefer does become a base for the muktzah item even though it is prohibited to place things on sefarim. If one intended to remove the muktzah item, e.g., by shaking it off on Shabbos, one may be lenient and then use the sefer since this is no different than the allowance to be lenient in the face of a potential financial loss. Accordingly, since Rav Feinstein maintains that blank paper is muktzah (See Mishnah Berurah Yomis 308 Seif 1 where this issue is discussed) one should not store that paper in his sefer since he thereby makes the sefer into a base for the muktzah paper.

lamp is removed Shimon's dish remains muktzah. Derech Chaim suggests that if one had in mind to remove it on Shabbos one can also combine the earlier opinion that maintains it would anyways not be muktzah since it never qualified as a base. (M.B. 27)

Siman 309 Seif 5:

One may not do any more than tilt or shake the non-muktzah item when he needs the barrel or the pillow but if he needs the place of the barrel or pillow and tilting or shaking the non-muktzah item will not suffice, it is permitted to carry the non-muktzah item with the stone or money in place in order to clear the space (And this is mentioned in siman 310).
